NEWS SUMMARY. Ulty Affairs.

 A slight fire occurred last evening at Brun's trimming store, No. 1914 Market street.

 A horse and carriage belonging to Mr. John Lenis, while crossing the railroad track at Grape street, Manayunk, was struck by a locomotive. and much damaged. Fortunately the occupants escaped unhurt.

—A meeting of the Produce Association was held yesterday afternoon. The committee ap-pointed to visit Washington and confer with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue reported that they had performed their duty. They were received by the Commissioner kindly, and after laying before him the names of parties doing business without license, thereby defrauding the Government, and operating against the produce dealers of this city, the Commissioner was urged to some course by which these grievances would be remedied. In response the commistion were be remedied. In response the committee were informed that although persons who had been charged with doing business without a license might pay the fine imposed upon them, still they would be required to take out a license, and a failure in this respect would render them liable to a criminal prosecution. The Commissioner said he would instruct the Collector of the Port in reference to the matter. Amendments to the constitution and by-laws were read and laid over until next meeting for action.

—The annual session of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Pennsylvania was commenced yesterday morning, at the hall, southwest corner of Ninth and Spring Garden streets. There was a large attendance of delegates from divisions in the city and from various parts of the State. After the initiation of new members, Mr. John Shallcross, the G. W. P., read his annual report, showing the condition of the Order at the present time. OUR NEW CLERGYMAN.

This popular orator delivered a lecture on "Our New Clergyman" last evening to a crowded house, at the Academy of Music. The lecture commenced his discourse by describing the place where his plot was laid as being situated between Wobbleton and Huckleberryville, and shut out from a sight of the noble Hudson. The place was called Turnipdale, and was built in a saucer-like hollow. A few houses were to be seen dotting each side of the hill, and were, as they appeared, the dwellings of the bloated aristocrats of the place. One of the houses, the one highest up the mountain, was occu pled by the nabob of the village, Mr. Upham and under whose nostrils the village of Turnipdale was built. In this village were two lawyers and a newspaper office, the sheet being named Turnipdale Standard of Liberty, which was not remarkable for the good English to be found in its editorials. Then there was the picturesque little church which will form no unimportant part of this story. The old clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Walker, had resigned, and was leaving for a new incumbency and an additional salary of $300 per annum. minister, the Rev. Mr. Trott, was to be paid the large salary of $900 per annum, but this amount would not always be guaranteed in the village of Turnipdale, and therefore Mr. Upham pro-mised to make up any deficiency which might be apparent at the end of the year. Everybody had the new minister on the brain, even the bald-headed little sexton, who was also the cobbler of the village, and the deacon could not sleep at night for dreadful dreams from which he inferred some trouble or other would happen to prevent the new clergyman from entering upon his new sphere of daty.

The lecturer then gave an account of a conversation over the tea table in Mrs. Hubbins' (the wife of one of the deacons) parlor, which also her dining-room, and which was made hot to suffocation by one of those many stoves em-ployed for, he believed, motives of mistaken economy, by so many persons in the country, who roast themselves sixteen hours every day in a hot room, in order to have the upper room warmed without an additional expenditure, and in which the ladies could go and spend the re-mainder of the twenty-four hours. At the teatable sat Mrs. Hubbins at the head; Mrs. Price on her right, Mrs. Carter on her left, Mr. Carter and Mr. Price by the side of their ladies, and Miss Araminta Hubbins and Miss Crocker. The conversation was amusing and of the ordinary busy-body style. It showed up the hypocrite and the curious; and the speculations, matrimonial and otherwise, which were indulged in made the audience laugh to their hearts content.

When Mr. Trott arrived, it appears he was shabbily but genteelly dressed. This made no difference to the Turnipdate tolks, as it would in New York, and a grand reception was given the new incumbent. When Sunday came everybody went to church. Trott was the centre of attraction. After the sermon Mr. Upham asserted that it was "the best discourse that was ever preached in Turnipdale." Mr. Hubbins characterized it as "the outpouring of the cream of propriety." Mr. Price said it was "a good, ear-nest discourse, fall of truthful Christian feeling." The bald-headed sexton, who was also the cobbler, styled it thuswise:—"It was such a beautiful sermon, and so full of wisdom that I was dumbfounded, sir; it made me perfectly stupid." And even "Drunken Joe," as he was cailed, a half crazy, inchristed wreten, said "that was the talk." Mrs. Hubbins praised it extravagantly because there was "not a particle of hypocrisy in it." She, however, did not like Mrs. Trott, who, when the congregation was singing, professed to be taking part in it when she did not. She also objected to Miss Trott coming to church with such a wide band and sash of ribbon to her dress. Well, "our new clerzyman" was a success, and everything went well for a few weeks. Presents in the shape of bookmarkers, images of shepherds and shepherdesses in all sorts of imaginable positions, etc. etc., were made to him every day. The flock of Mr. Trott used to go to a Jew in the village, who, singular te say, was in the clothing business, and purchase presents for their pastor, and on one oc-casion the clothier suggested, "Would it not be better if you make Mr. Trott a present of a new great-coat?" This was found to be acceptable, and under the superintendence of Mr. Upham donations of a barrel of flour, a big jar of pickles, a box of buckwheat, and other domestic articles soon found their way to Mr. Trott's house. Mrs. Hubbins, however, soon began to tire of the "donation" ousiness, and didn't fail to express her dislike.

Matters went on, and at last Mr. Upham came to Mr. Trott, and asked him to give a pitch into his mill hands in his sermon next Sunday, because they had imitated their New York brethren, and struck for higher wages. Mr. Trott, like an ignoramus that he was, knowing that the mill hands did not contribute towards the support of the church, put the question to Mr. Upham: "Well, who are right in this matterthe mill hands have but low salaries?" Mr. Upham replied that, of course, he was right, and the preacher must give them a pitch in. Mr. Trott mildly remonstrated "he did not think it : proper subject to introduce into a Sunday sermon," whereupon Mr. Upham went away in a huft, saying, "Let the mill hands support the church, for I won't." Mr. Upham then went about the village spreading the news that the new clergyman was 'putting on airs, and would soon be a failure. Mr. Trott pon dered over the matter, and reading in a New York paper that a family had just died of starration, he determined to preach a sermon on the subject, and urging upon society that such things should not be allowed. He then infimated that he would preach a special sermon in behalf of the starving families in New York, at the close of which he would make a collection. The feeling in the village was opposed to this on the ground that New Yorkers had nothing to do with Turnipdaleans. The day soon came around, and five persons were in attendance to hear the sermon, and they were the five poorest persons in the parish. The persevering preacher then went and implored Mr. Upham's help, but he refused to do anything. At last the climax came. Mr. Trott preached a sermon on the subject of the rich man, the camel, and the eye of the needle, and giving the moral that money was but a poor thing to lean on alone after all. After this discourse, Mr. Upham declared that the sermon was levelled at him, and asked why did Mr. Trott come over from Cherry Landing for the sake of only $300 additional salary per annum, and declared he should be called upon to resign. Young Upham was notified to discontinue his visits to the vicarage, but the young hopeful exclaimed that Mand did not write her father's

The lecturer then went on to speak of the economy which the clergyman's wife at this period had to exercise, and subsequently how Mr. Trott's friends were on the lookout for a new church for him, but could not find one on account of the parson market being glutted. While in these straitened circumstances, Trott used to console himself with the reflection that he came from a good stock. After a while a rich relation died and left him a large fortune. Then, what a change from absolute poverty to wealth! Trott purchased a few clothes from Mr. Jacobs in the village, but the majority had to be got from New York. Then his perishioners began to overlook the imprudence which had been so unwisely exhibited in his begging sermon, and he was soon engaged in the for mation of a "Society for the Prevention of Starvation. He subscribed to churches, chapels, and, in fact, to every charitable undertaking: but Mrs. Trott, who saw the money given away whenever it was asked for, did not like it. Then Mr. Trott, the richest man in the village, was the unhappiest; but he said:—"I am a clergy-man, and must be meck." In the meantime Billy Upham had gone to Cuba, and learned the value of sugar. Returning to Turnipdale, after the rustics of that humdrum place had retired. he took his guitar and made his way to Maud's window. It appears Maud had been informed that her Billy had fallen in love with about twenty Spanish senoritas. This was not true, and Billy, wishing to serenade her after the foreign fashion, began to string his guitar, while the snow was falling thick and fast all the time He sang the following under circumstances of

When they shall whisper that I am untrue, My fond love has wandered, my dearest, from you, The hopes of my manhood have strayed from the Abjuring the vows which so gladdened my youth. List to them not, Maud, list to them not.

The Hubbins family lived next door, and were aroused by the foreign air of Billy, and joined in and made a quartette of it, Billy keeping up a screaming obligate outside.

The lecturer then imitated all the parties joining in the song, and at last the noise was so great that it was found necessary to wake Mr. Hubbins. The end of Billy's song terminated in notes of exclamation, oh! oh! caused by Mrs. Hubbins, who, thinking it was Drunken Joe, with his banjo, making the noise, precipitated a bucket of water over him.

The next morning matters were explained. and the long-separated were reunited. Trott and Upham were reconciled, after some small amount of recrimination, and Mr. De Cordova closed his humorous sketch by describing the happy culmination of all the clergyman's trouoles, and a bright future for Billy and Maud, who had been comfortably settled in an enviable nomestead, purchased at the expense of "Our

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

For Additional Legal Intelligence see Outside Pages, Court of Quarter Sessions. THE BROOES CASE-REASONS FOR A NEW TRIAL

AS TO MARA AND DOUGHERTY. In support of the motion made for a new trial in the case of Hugh Mara and James Dougherty, convicted last Sunday morning of assault and battery with intent to kill James J. Brooks, the following reasons have been assigned by counsel:-

1. Because the learned Judge erred in allowthe Commonwealth to set aside jurors without assigning cause therefor.
2. Because the learned Judge erred in refusing to allow the defendants to challenge Joseph Miller. 8. Because the learned Judge erred in admitting evidence offered by the Commonwealth to contradict the statements made on the hearing of the case by Neil McLaughlin, a witness called by the Commonwealth. 4. Because the learned Judge erred in admit-ting evidence of independent and different statements made by Neil McLaughlin other than those made by him on the trial of the cause, and in permitting the District Attorney to comment on the same as corroboration of the testimony of Thomas Hughes. 5. Because the learned Judge permitted Mr. Fox to detail conversations said to have occurred between the witness McLaughlin and defendants at Coney Island, this statement having been made to him (Fox) in the absence of defendants and their counsel. 6. Because the learned Judge erred in permitting statements under oath to be made in the presence of the jury, of the conduct in the ab-sence of defendants of Kelly, a person called by the Commonwealth as a witness, but not subpornaed by any one, and still further erred in commenting upon same in the presence of said jury, and in adjourning the Court on account of said absence, and in permitting the Bistriet Attorney to state the importance of said witness and in commenting upon his conduct in his final address to the jury. 7. The Court erred in suspending the trial to procure the attendance of Mayor Fox, who was not then a witness in the case.

8. The learned Judge exred in permitting the Commonwealth, in cross-examination, to ask Mr. Brooks if he did not selze whisky at Mr. Martin's store two or three times. 9. The learned Judge erred in admitting the testimony of Mr. Tryon in rebuttal.

18. The learned Judge erred in refusing to allow counsel to correct misstatements of evidence unintentionally made by the District Attorney in his address to the jury.

11. The Judge erred in instructing the jury, that if they believed defendants were present, it was immaterial who fired the shot or used the blackjack; under this indictment all would be convicted as principals, 12. The Judge erred in sending for the jury at the time and in the manner in which he did it. 13. The Judge erred in taking the verdict on Sunday. 14. The verdict was against the law and the evidence. It is understood that Monday next has been fixed for the argument. Court of Over and Terminer Judges Ludlow and Paxson.

THE MORTON HOMICIDE. In the case of Daniel Reading, who is on trial for the murder of William Morton on the 18th of October, 1868, before reported, the principal evidence adduced by the Commonwealth, after the close of our report, was that of Moses Low-ther, who testified as follows:— I knew William Morton; remember perfectly well the night he was shot; was standing at the open end of Creasy's bar; when he was shot I was outside on the pavement; when shot he was standing some three or four feet from a biliboard on Tasker street; there had been some three or four knock-downs in the bar-room, which was caused by some half-dozen young men coming into the bar-room with pistols and guns under their coats, cheering, some for Grant and some for Colfax, and some for Seymour and Blair: they retreated to the Sixth street door, turned, and fired all together and then ran into the street; one of them stood on Tasker street and fired; and one young fellow. Morton, put his hand upon the bill board, cried out: - "My God, I am shot!" and fell, the man who fired was the man in the dock, Daniel Reading; another man fired two shots from the middle of Sixth and Tasker; Morton had made this exclamation before this second man had fired: Reading then called to this secoed man to ollow him, saying "McManus was shot," then ran up Sixth street; I chased the other man down Tasker street as far as Henry Morris's gate, where a half dozen shots were fired at me and I had to stop. Cross-examined—I am a blacksmith's helper. working at Fairmount Park; I worked before that with Morris & Tasker, before that I worked at Merrick's; between my work at Merrick's and with Morris & Tasker I was undergoing chastisement at Cherry Hill Prison, for folly; I applied to Judge Ludlow for aid in getting through this world, and by his assistance obtained employment, which I have held steadily and soberly: I was sentenced by Judge Ludiow on the 25th of March, 1804, and was discharged from the Penitentiary on the 25th of March, 1867; I have not been in prison since; just after the party at the door fired into the room, and the heaviest art of the firing was over, a man named Smith came in, and some one inside fired at him; this was before Morton was shot; Morton was an innocent youth and had nothing to do with the fight or either of the parties; he did not ollow these parties out; he was shot after the ross-firing at the door; the first shot knocked forton down, and the man who fired that run out in the street to another man, who then fired a second and third shot; I did not say to William Ellinger at the hospital that I would swear the were Dan Price, Kit Manley, and Daniel Reading, that Kit Manley shot me, and because Daniel Reading was a friend of his I would swear him into the Penitentiary, if hard swearing would do it: I was too low to converse with Ellinger, and the doctor cleared him away from my bed. Catharine Morton sworn—I live at Cuba and Tasker streets: William Morton was my son; he was brought home between 8 and 9 o'clock upon a settee; there were cakes of blood on the settee, from the tops of his boots to the top of his head; he was shot in the thigh and palms of his hands, and a ball passed through his boot. Here the Commonwealth closed.
